Max Hankin Poetry

BEHOLDEN

Because of personal gains,
a few people have lost their self respect.
For they have become beholden to others,
who in turn will collect.

They have accepted an unusual raise,
free meals or a gratis vacation spot.
Now they're obligated to hurt innocent ones,
so character they have not.

They have sold out for small favors,
for their beholders' greedy goals.
Now they vote in unison, pretending
they're righteous,
These poor misguided souls.
